SOCIAL EQUALITY.

The New Era, a paper published and edited by colored men of Charleston, in its issue of the 6th inst., takes a sensible view of the social status of the negro, and makes some good suggestions may be elevated.

Nothing has caused more chagrin to the abolitionist of the North, than his failure to elevate the negro to a position of social equality with the white man. The best blood of both North and South was spilled to make him free; hundreds of Yankee school-marms and reverend gentlemen have immolated themselves upon the altar of social censure to improve his intellectual and moral faculties; and congressional enactments have exhausted their power in behalf of his social advancement. But after fifteen years, the change has been scarcely percentible. The more intelligent among colored men have been attentive observers of these things, and strongly impregnated with the erroneous conception that "all men are born free and equal," their pride has been bitterly galled by their social ostracism. They are beginning, however, to realize the fact that their inferiority is not occasioned by ideas which are based upon pride or prejucial or imaginary distinctions, but are as marked and real as those which God
